

October 8, 2004

I think the Reverend has been here before, at a blues festival, but I didn't see him. I'll be sure to see him in September. The Temple, where he is playing, is a big old church that was converted to a nightclub. I have not been in it yet, but have wanted to see what it was like. Lansing is getting to be a good place for music. Lots of good local acts. Jackson Browne, Bonnie Raitte and Keb' Mo' were here last week. I wish I had gotten tickets.

I have not heard anything about What the Bleep Do We Know other than what Tom said. I want to see Shaun of the Dead, and I'll have to go alone.

Carol is still working full time, and she is pretty stressed. Trying to clean up an accounting mess left by someone else. She should be done by December.

I've finished my big outdoor projects. The deck in back looks great. I got rid of the benches, so now it is flat and open, like a stage. I sanded it and put wood preservative on it, and it looks like new.

Love, Dad

--- Amy Harry <camunda67@hotmail.com> wrote:

> Hi Dad,
>
> One of my favorite rockabilly (actually, > psychobilly) bands is coming to > Lansing in December. You should go! Reverend Horton > Heat rocks. They are all > really good musicians, and they're old. They've been > at it for a long time,
> and they put on a good show.
>
> The date and venue is at the bottom of the email.
>
> Did you see/find What the Bleep Do We Know yet? I > tried seeing it a second > time, and it was sold out. I guess that's what > happens . . . a few people go > at first, and it just spreads by word of mouth, and > soon shows are sold out.
> CNN had an article about it.
>
> Love,
>
> Amy