

January 22, 2005

Cindy,

No, I don't wish I had a union to help me out. I retired. No, I don't think people should work year after year for the same wages. I think they should get all they can get - just not by threatening a strike. If they think they are being paid too little, they should find an employer who appreciates them enough to pay them more. I do think education and experience and training is worth something - so why is Lansing School District trying to get rid of their most experienced teachers? Is that what you mean by "good business practices"?

If I thought unions were good for workers in general, not just union members, I'd be for them.

People who benefit financially from unions have a tough time seeing that they might not be a good thing for the economy in general.

Steve

--- Cindy Thiele <cthiele@accn.org> wrote:

> You are just pissed off because you didn't have a > union to help you in your > job?! Do you think people should keep working for > the same company year > after year at the same wages? Don't you think > experience and continuing > education in job training is worth something? You > have no idea of good > business practices --in education and other fields > without doing practical > research. Get a job. Volunteer. Visit Aunt > Nina. You are a damn > fanatic based on high brow theory with little > practical sense. Your good > mind is going to waste.
>
> Your loving sister--Cindy
>