Amy,

The book got here today. Thanks! It has a lot of good information. Where to find them and when, their peculiarities. Did you know that turkey vultures are more closely related to storks than eagles? They figured that out because like storks, they poop on their legs to keep cool. I'm not making this up. Ted Black, the guy that wrote the book, frequently attends our Capital Area Audubon Society meetings. He is old and bent over, but keeps on going. Carol and I are the least knowledgable people in the group.

Love, Dad
