Hi

Yes, we are in sunny Florida by now. However, while it has been sunny, it has not been all that warm. It has been windy four days out of five, and that makes the wind chill factor much cooler than usual. Way down in the 70's and in the 60's at night. Why half the time I wear long pants. And even worse, the wind ruins the fishing and the shelling. I think I'll try to talk June in to going to Cancun next year. Or is that Cuncan?

Cindy came with us this year, for two weeks, and we spent the first week in the Orlando area making all the tourist traps, Disney World, EPCOT Center, and Sea World. She appeared to have a ball. She did accuse us of trying to get rid of her though. While coming down the Florida Turnpike we stopped at a rest stop for lunch and to gas up, Cindy got out of the car to get a coke and I drove off without her. June had her nose in a book and didn't notice. Thirty one miles down the pike June turn to say something to her and noticed she wasn't in the back seat. In the mean time When Cindy told the filling station attendents we had left her they notified the State Police and all toll booths to the south. Needless to say, when we got back to the stop everyone was having a ball. Cindy said that the only thing that embarassed her was when the police asked her age and she had to say 33. It was like old homework with the toll booths and cops from then on.

June is doing Ok, I guess. They ran a bunch of tests on her just before we left. She heard one of the techincans that ran a KAT scan mention a tumor on her liver and that scared hell out of both of us. Turned out it was ~~not/malignant~~ benign. But it does hurt, along with her artheritis: Got some differant insulin down here at a Naval clinic and the doctors have her on two shots a day rather than one and we feel that she may be doing a little better.

Well, here it is the 17th, and I haven't finished this letter. Must have had something very important to do, like fishing, or going into Big Pine to the store, or something. Did get a letter from Eleanor today, though. I think she is going to do something sometime. It was mailed from Texas on the 12th and she said that they were going to visit Al for a few hours, then some friends near by for a couple of days, and then come down here for a day or two. If they can get a room. Of course I don't have the slights idea when, but I guess we'll see them when and if they come.

It was good to here from you, I do like to sort of keep up on my relatives, at least more so than when I was younger. All of my offspring seem to be doing real good at the present time.

Love
