8/10/04

Alan

There would be a record for each voter in a national database, and it would include his votes on every issue/election. The voter would have access to it, but the election system would use it only to count votes.

The problem is that The Government would know how you vote, which makes a lot of people nervous. But measures could be taken to make sure that information is kept private. Personally, I don't care if people know how I vote.

Steve