

Sunday at 1 P.M.

Dear Family-- ---

I looked at the calendar and found out that it was once again my day to tell my family all of the things I thought they ought to do for the next week.

We went to church again today but I still don't like that manner in which the minister addresses the congregation.

Last night I went to see a play 'Bury the Dead' by Bernard Shaw. It was put on by a bunch of the university students and I don't think I have ever seen anything done better. It is a play for peace but is not presented in a peaceful manner, when I get home I hope to be able to tell you something about it. It is so hard to begin to get the idea across by just telling it that I couldn't even begin to do it in writing.

Will you send me that skirt pattern which I used when I was home this last time? It is in the envelope with that suit pattern. Catherine thinks she wants a skirt so I volunteered to help her make one.

Did you know that it is less than three weeks until I will be home for Christmas vacation? I seem to keep that pretty much in mind.

I was invited out to Thanksgiving dinner on the night after Thanksgiving. Doris Wacker and family from Lansing came over here to have dinner with her Aunt who lives here and I was also invited. Wasn't that nice? The dinner was grand and it makes me feel even better when I realize that she does all her cooking entirely by book. Who knows there may be a chance for me some day. I suppose though that I will try to do it with a novel or some book of that sort stuck up in front of me.

I haven't written to Halson yet but I am going to today. If I can manage to go to school another term, which of course will be field work in Detroit I may see a lot of him.

Am I going to have a chance to go back in the woods after the tree again this year? It seems like years since I have done that. If Bill can come I imagine he would enjoy doing something like that. We still don't know whether he is going to be able to make it or not.

Say do you folks listen to 'Grand Hotel' on Sunday at 3:30? Well, if you don't you should. It is a play of some sort or another and is always good. I have made it a rule to listen here, whether those here like it or not they listen, guests or not.

I'm off to write a letter to Halson.
